Here's a description of the types of materials used to make quality Patio Furniture:

Wicker Furniture is a very classic look used primarily under covered or three-season porches. It can be constructed of natural materials like spun wood byproducts or cane. Or, it can be made from vinyl or PVC. Vinyl of varying grades is very common in the market. Wicker should be attached to an extruded and/or cast aluminum powder coated frame and can be finished to suit any taste.

Wrought Iron is another classic look. Wrought iron patio furniture is made from either solid and/or tubular steel. These parts are cast, forged, welded together and bent into different designs to suit different tastes. Typically this is a heavier piece of patio furniture that won't blow over.

Wrought Aluminum is made of cast and/or extruded aluminum. It is bent and welded to form a desired style. Aluminum will not rust; therefore it is an excellent material for outdoor use. It can be powder coated for an attractive and durable finish.

Cast Aluminum is melted aluminum poured into a mold. There are different grades of aluminum ingot melted in this process. The molds are either permanent milled metal or molded sand. After the mold is opened these parts are cut, ground and either bolted together or welded inconspicuously to form the desired piece of furniture. The finish is a durable powder coated finish. Cast Aluminum is often very ornate and intricate due to the flexibility of the molds, especially the permanent type milled molds.

Extruded Aluminum patio furniture is made from aluminum that has been pushed or pulled through a die which shapes it into a smooth, continuous and usually tubular shape. These extruded tubes come in various cross section shapes and sizes, thus a variety of styles can be created by bending, welding and bolting them together. Noted for its smooth surface, a variety of powder-coated finishes are available on this type of furniture.

DINING Choices include different height tables: euro (roughly 24"), standard dining (30"), balcony (same as counter, 36"), and bar (40-42") height. These are available in various shapes and sizes including ovals, squares, rectangles and round. There are appropriate seat heights in the chairs and stools for all heights of tables.

UMBRELLAS are synonymous with dining but they can also be used freestanding with appropriately weighted bases. Large cantilevered umbrellas can provide shade for a conversation grouping. Sizes on display in our store range from 6' to 13' in diameter.

DEEP SEATING refers to the more comfortable patio items like cushioned loveseats, sofas, lounge chairs and foot stools, complemented by end tables & occasional tables plus outdoor draperies, pillows and throws.
